SPECIAL SERMONS

Alexandria Celebrating Christmas in Fitting Manner.

WASHINGTON TIMES BUREAU, ALEXANDRIA, VA., DEC. 25.

Alexandria is today celebrating in a fitting manner the birth of Christ. At all the churches special sermons were delivered and the choirs rendered special music. Christmas falling on Sunday made the attendance at the thurches today larger than for many

The day has been spent by a large number of families in reunions, and former Alexandrians from all parts of the United States are today here makign merry with their relatives.
The poor of the city have also been fittingly remembered by the citizens generally, and by Alexandria Lodge of Elks in particular.

The Rt. Rev. Bishop Lloyd conducted services and preached at Christ Church. At St. Mary's Catholic Church there were four masses this morning at 5, 6:30, 9:30, and 10:30. At all these nasses a collection was taken up for the orphans of the diocese of Virginia.

At the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at 6:30 o'clock this morning there was a special union service and Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Policeman Gayton Arrington, while walking near the corner of Oronoko and Royal streets about 3:30 o'clock this morning, slipped on the ice and falling fracturing his hip. He was picked up by Policeman Roland and taken to his home, 411 North Patrick street, where his hip was set by Dr. Delaney. His condition this morning is favorable.

R. E. Gott, residing at 110 Wolfe street, reports that some one entered his he house last night and stole eight chickens. The police are investigated at the chief's attention to the fragments of paper. "Are you we'king on anything very important?" a died the chief's attention to the fragments of paper.

"Yer you we'king on anything very important?" a died the chief.

The man smiled.

"Yer yimportant. The sooner I'm done the beitter. I'll know where I stand. I'm looking up in the directory all the streets with 'de' in their names. You remember that one of the bits of envelope read 'ue de.' It doesn't cost much to look up streets, anyhow."

"Well, drop it. Get a cab and see if M. Victor Barten is at home. His address is No. 16 Rue de Douai."

"Rue de—?" Javel was ciearly interested. Policeman Gayton Arrington, while Midnight mass was celebrated at the chapel in St. Mary's Academy last night, and was attended by the Sisters of the Holy Cross, the pupils of St. Mary's Academy, and a few Alexandrians

Potomac Lodge of Odd Fellows is making preparations for the holding of a semi-annual meeting of the members of that order in the Fortieth District, whic comprises Alexandria and the Announcement has been made of the marriage at Gruce Protestant Episcopal church parsonage, last Friday, of William M. Clampett and Miss Evelyn Gainer. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Clampett left on a trip to Richmond.

The Sunday schools of Christ and St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal churches yesterday held their Christmas celebrations.

In the Corporation Court, yesterday, Judge Louis C. Farley, presiding, a fina decree of divorce on the grounds of de-sertion was granted Mollie Monrot Reeves from George Francis Reeves.

Old Dominion Commandry, No. 11 Knights Templar, will meet at their asylum tomorrow at U. 5 o'clock to observe the annual Christmas custom of the order.

Synopsis of Chapters Already Published Victor Barton, reporter for a Paris ournal, on his way home from a friend's touse late at night, sees in the street wo men and a woman acting suspicturely. From their committed a robbery, and they just committed a robbery, and covers an old man horribly murdered. Barton's first thought is to track the oriminals, but his intense love for adventure prompts him to the determination to cover all the traces left by the real murderers and substitute evidence pointing to himself as the guilty man. His contempt for the intelligence of the police leads him to picture to himself how cleverly he can play with them, even after he is caught. After arranging the murdered man's room and throwing on the floor a broken sleeve link and 'hree pieces of an envelope, Barton goes out and, disguising his voice, anonymously telephones a notice of the murder to his own paper, the Planet. Planet.

His paper later sends him to report the nurder. After going to the house and nterviewing the chief of police and given the interview to the other reporters, to returns 'o the Planet office. In spite if the editor's objections Barton resigns rom the staff, giving as an excuse his seed for a rest. Without returning to his wn room, he tries to lose Eimself in the uieter quarters of Paris. Meanwhile, a sen-eyed detective discovers the scraps in paper Barton had left in the room of the marker.

Barton, in hiding, calls up the Planet office and, two calls going in, overhears the chief of police ask the city editor for his address.

The telephone bell rang.

"Who is this" he asked.

"Good. What's the news?"

"Barton has not been home for three days."

"Very well. I'll look into this myself tomorrow. Good-by."

"So you will look into this tomorrow, will you?" thought the inspector. "If you do you?" thought the inspector had not told all that he knew. He kept his main idea to himself. He was too recently promoted to command much respect; no one would listen to his views and take them seriously. For that reason he determined to play the game alone. Ever since he had discovered the fragments of the torn envelope he felt that he had hit upon an important clue. His first vague impression was strengthened when he learned Barton's address. He almost regretted the hint that he had dropped to the chief, but consoled himself with the reflection that the chief was too obstinate to adopt a mere inspector's theories. Perhaps it was better that he had spoken. The chief would be all the maze reluctant to yield. He decided to ferret out Barton in his own way. The singular coincidence in the number of Parton's residence in the number of Parton's residence in the number of Parton's residence and the number on the envelope was worth explaining, even if it led to nothing.

Javei was a man of ideas Instead of interpreting evidence, he ased it in gathering more evidence—the proper in gentlements of the continuation of This Story Will Be.

nterpreting evidence, he used it in athering more evidence—the proper node of procedure for a true detective. As he walked down Rue de Douai his As he walked down Rue de Doual his eye, in searching out the number of Parton's apartment, fell upon the number 22. An idea flashed upon him. On the envelope the postman had written, "Unknown at 22, try 16." If Barton was at all involved in the case, inquiry at 22 ought to reveal something of interest. He had nothing to lose by inquiring, and accordingly he routed out the concierge.

"I want to see M. Victor Barton."
"Don't know him."
Javel was disappointed. Still, he persisted timidly: "He's a newspaper man.
Can't you tell me something about

The concierge shook his head. Just then his wife appeared on the scene-garrulous, rotund creature, conjumed with curiosity-to ascertain for whom Javel was asking. The inspector rected her pleasantly and repeated his mestion: r Kislev.

greeted her pleasantly and repeated als question:

"M. Victor Barton, I'm looking for. He's a newspaper man, I was told he lived here. Perhaps I have the wrong number and you may be able to—"
The man sbrugged his shoulders. The woman stepped forward.

"Why! Don't you remember?" Then, turning to the inspector, she added:
"We haven't anybody here by that name now. We did have a reporter about six months ago. Two or three times the postman has left letters for him here by mistake. Now that I think of it, I'm sure it was the same man you're looking for."

Turning to her husband, the woman in celebration of this feast, services for the children will be held this afterneon at the Elghth street temple.

On Friday evening the Rev. S. Simon delivered an appropriate address on the significance of the feast.

The feast had its origin about 150 B. C., when the division of Alexander's vast empire placed Judea under the control of the King of Syria, Antiochus. Desiring to secure a unity of language and religion, Antiochus attempted to force the Greek heathenism upon the Jews. How he failed is a matter of history.

No. 16. That's odd. And then Rue de—"
The chief looked at him with half-closed eyes. What was the man driving at? It flashed upon him suddenly that No. 18 had been written upon one of the pleces of paper. The number to which he had attached absolutely no importance began to have some meaning now. He looked at him. Neither spoke for a few seconds; neither dared to utter the thought that was uppermost in the mind of each. At last the chief broke the silence:

"Well, as I said before, you'd better dared to No. 16. Look up this man Earton and find out where he is. Call me up on the telephone as soon as you leave there. I wouldn't piace too much importance on the fact that he lives at No. 16. If I were you. A coincidence such as the one you evidently have in rind means noting in particular."

"It's odd." said Javel. "very odd. No. 16. If I were you. A coincidence such as the one you evidently have in rind means noting in particular."

"It's odd." said Javel. "very odd. The number was relevant. It was not easy to forsake the position he had assumed in the morning when the man first suggested the possibility of utiliz.

"Wen haven't anybody have a from endow. We did have a reporter about six months ago. Two or three times the postman has left letters for him here by mistake. Turning to her husband, the woman reminded him:

"Lon't you remember? The postman brought a letter about a month ago. I think he lives at 16 or 18 now."

Javel hastily took his leave. He almost danced down the street to No. 16. A man with whom he collided in his joy and almost swept off his feet swore at him and vowed he was a bilind lunatic. Javel paid not the slightest attention to him and hurried on. He entered the house at 16 in frantic haste and asked the concierge for Barton.

"He isn't in, 'she replied.

"Do you know when he will come broke the position he had asymptom the term of the single of it, I'm sure it was the same man you're looking for."
